response to basic conditions of inequality and scarcity, it eventually became one more mechanism that contributed to even greater scarcity and inequality for many in Netzahualcoyotl."

A LEGACY OF PROMISES: AGRICULTURE, POLITICS, AND RITUAL IN THE MORELOS HIGHLANDS OF MEXICO. By Guillermo de la Peña. (Austin: University of Texas Press, 1982. 289 pages, tables and figures, appendixes, and index, $25.00.)

The subject of this book is described by the author as "the use and organization of land and labor in a 'peasant' region called the Morelos Highlands." This is a concise review of the tightly organized agricultural societies of the pre-colonial and colonial periods; of the symbiotic relationship of the highlands to the neighboring lowlands; and of the organizational disintegration of agricultural societies as a result of the conflicting politics and policies of the 19th century as well as the voracity of the hacienda system.

COLONIAL ENTREPRENEURS: FAMILIES AND BUSINESS IN BOURBON MEXICO CITY. By John E. Kicza. (Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press, 1983. 313 pages, maps, tables, illustrations, appendix, notes, bibliography and index, $24.95.)

In the late 18th century and into the middle of the 19th century, Mexico City had the largest population of any city in the New World and it surpassed all other cities in the diversity of its business institutions and the complexity of its social life. This is the first volume in a two-volume study of Mexican City life in the late colonial period, 1770 to 1821.

The first volume deals with the ethnic and demographic composition of the city; the highest elite—"the Great Families" of wealth and station; the organization and practices of international traders and merchants of the provincial trade; with retail merchants and wholesalers; the career opportunities in this sphere of the economy; the social and economic behavior of the most successful merchants, the personnel and operations of large-scale productive establishments like mills and slaughterhouses; and the artisans who were employed in scores of crafts. Throughout the study, the importance of family relationships in the expansion of family enterprise and wealth is stressed. John Kicza's lively style makes this in-depth study of Bourbon Mexico City most readable. ■
